Not illustrated. 1890 Excerpt: .with the Bromide of Potassium, on account of the greater toxic or poisonous effect of Potassium salts upon the human organism, as compared with those in which Sodium is the base. In the vast majority of cases in which the Bromides are used the vigor of nutrition is already lowered. It is, therefore, a matter of very considerable consequence to select that particular member of this important group of therapeutic agents that, while it secures the depressing or quieting effect desired, nevertheless exercises in the way of pernicious influence the least on the vigor of nutrition, or in other words the reparative power of the body. I am thoroughly clear in my mind that the Bromide of Sodium should be substituted for the more commonly, and as I may say almost universally, employed Bromide of Potassium. I feel so strongly in this matter, that I am more than willing to make this the occasion for stating clearly and at length, my views, with the hope that for the benefit of the vast mass of nervous invalids, for whom these agents are prescribed, they may have the slight but decisive advantage that will result from the proposed change. If you shall be able to exert a favorable influence in effecting this through the manifold channels at your disposal, the change I feel certain ought to be made, you will confer a boon of no small degree upon nervous invalids. Most respectfully yours, To Mbssbs. Wm. B. Wabnbr...
