WESTMORLAND VILLAGE CHAPTER I. A LAKELAND VALLEY AND ITS PEOPLE. The traveller who climbs up from the Windermere railway station to the head of Kirkstone Pass will find himself, when he has mounted the steep rise by St. Catherines brow, following a road which runs along one side of the Troutbeck Valley. To his left there is a glorious prospect across the widest and loveliest reach of Windermere; in the foreground the level pastures of Calgarth, and beyond the lake the twin Langdale Pikes, with the peaks of the Cumberland mountains rising in an exquisite combination in the distance. Below him are the wooded banks of the stream which B a gives its name to the dale, and the fells beyond it are the Troutbeck Hundreds, once the common pasture of the farms in the valley, now divided into allotments. The village has...
