Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Preservation of Wood, Steel and Galvanized Surfaces The object of paint is twofold: To protect the surface and incidentally to beautify. A good paint must spread easily, smoothly and evenly under the brush. It must retain its color and not change in composition when exposed to sun and storm or the many gases arising from the combustion of coal, etc., but must in short - Wear. Whatever paint embodies these qualities, is a good, reliable paint, no matter what it may be called, let it be White Lead paint, Zinc paint or any other. If the manufacturer makes a paint possessing the virtues indicated, he is making good paint. There are many painters who will tell you without any hesitation, that White Lead and Linseed Oil make the most permanent paint for wood, for the simple reason they do not know any better, their knowledge of pigments being limited. There are, however, other pigments than White Lead which are much more permanent, and by a judicious combination of them with White Lead and Linseed...
