Not illustrated. 1918 Excerpt: .(c) Sporadic cases occurring in a camp or garrison require the isolation of the immediately affected organizations and the patient, as in the case of recruits. To this end a report at the time of the first case and daily thereafter during the course of the epidemic must be made to the chief surgeon and if near a town to the local board of health. (d) Special methods of prevention consist in (i) the immunization of contacts with a serum (antidiphtheria or meningitis) (2) proper ventilation, with reduction of crowding of tents, cantonments or dugouts and (3) in all cases of possible or actual infections, bombard the enemy in his trenches with gargles, sprays and local applications. (e) Early diagnosis. This is important. Failing to do so may be the medical officer s fault. Bear in mind every epidemic has a first case. When therefore a soldier comes to you with a cold in the head, or coughing or sneezing or a sore throat, don t treat his complaint as trivial and dismiss him with a gargle, but treat the cause of his complaint with all the seriousness a first case of an epidemic would deserve and so avoid the epidemic. 341. Suggested outline of what to tell the troops about respiratory infections. The germs that cause these diseases grow well in the dark, warm, moist lining of the nose, throat, windpipe and lungs, and they are coughed or sneezed out or blown out and float...
